FOOTE, Charles Augustus, a Representative from New York; born in Newburgh, Orange County, N. Y., April 15, 1785; attended private schools in Newburgh and Kingston, N. Y.,
and was graduated from Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., in 1805; studied law, was admitted to the bar in 1808, and practiced in New York City and later in Delhi, Delaware County, N. Y.; colonel in the New York State Militia, Sixth Division; trustee of Delaware Academy; president of the village of Delhi; elected as a Democrat to the Eighteenth Congress (March 4, 1823-March 3, 1825); resumed the practice of law in Delhi, N. Y., where he died August 1, 1828; interment in the private burying ground at "Arbor Hill," the estate of his father. Congressional Biographical

CHARLES AUGUSTUS FOOTE

Born April 15, 1785 at Newburgh or Crompond, N. Y.
Died August 1, 1828 at Delhi, N. Y.
Married October 10, 1806, Marie, the daughter of Jesse and Margaretta de Hart Baldwin. She died August 29, 1824.
The children were: Frances (b.1809; married Charles Marvine); Catherine Bruen (b.1811; d.1898); Rensselaer William (b.1813;
West Point, Capt.; killed Gaines' Mills); Harriet (b.1815;
d. 1815); Charles Augustus, Jr., (b. Mar. 18, 1818; d. Feb. 28, 1896;
m. Adelia Johnson, Sept. 11, 1845, who d. Aug. 1888); James (b.1821).

One of Marie's sisters married the well-known lawyer, Judge Aaron Vanderpool of New York. While in Congress, Mr. Vanderpool was one day called the "Kinderhook Roarer" which, as often happens, clung to him through life. When I was taken to see him as a child, I remember him as the mildest of white-haired old men, and much interested in Charles' little girl. The family now spell their name in various ways as regards capitals.

Another sister married, James Bruen of Newark, N. J., a brother of Matthias of New York.

One of her aunts, Laura Waldron, was the wife of the English Minister to France.

Jesse Baldwin was an importing merchant, silks and wines, doing business at 161 Broadway, living at Newark.

Charles attended private schools at Poughkeepsie and Kingston until he entered Union College, Schenectady, where he was graduated in 1805, going at once to study law with Judge Peter Van Schaack at Kinderhook, then to Judge Josiah Ogden Hoffman,
New York. While with the latter he came back to Delhi to live, and began practice in the different courts of the State, which he continued until his death. He was in Congress, 1824-25.
His wife having died in 1824, he sank gradually into a melancholic state that increased until his death in 1828, but little over forty years of age.

He served in the militia in the different grades, being at the time of his death Colonel and Inspector of the Sixth State Division. He lies in the family burying ground at Arbor Hill, the estate of Judge Ebenezer Foote, now owned by Hon. John Davenport Clarke.

Justin died in 1827; Charles, his only remaining son, in 1828;
and the stricken father followed in 1829.

Charles, Jr., a little fellow at the time of his father's death, became in time a merchant, good, honorable, and filled some of the best local offices with great credit, never forgetting his courteous manners to all. The village paper said at his death: "The last gentleman of the old school in our midst, has passed away."

Studied law at Kinderhook with Judge Van Schaack. Of a number of men there at the time, who afterward became promiinent in the world, it was young Martin Van Buren, who most often came out with him to Arbor Hill, and in that time he became an aspirant for the hand of sweet young Margaret Foote, Charles' sister, but she had already secretly given her heart to the young clergymen whom she afterward married, and thus lost the opportunity of becoming a Mistress of the White House.

After leaving Kinderhook, Charles was for several years in the office of Josiah Ogden Hoffman, Esq., in New York, then returned to Delhi, began an excellent practice, and was sent to Congress in 1824, but his death ended all.
