American Monthly Review of Reviews
How Can I Keep Up With the Times?
It is pretty hard to keep well informed on the political news, the scientific news, the literary news, the educational movements, the great business developments, the hundreds of interesting and valuable articles in the hundreds of excellent magazines. About the only way it can be done by the average busy man and woman is to read a magazine like "The Review of Reviews" and, as it is the only magazine of the sort, it is a good thing to send $2.50 for a year's subscription.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT says:
"I know that through its columns views have been presented to me that I could not otherwise have had access to; consequently I am glad to have given them a free utterance in its columns."

DAVE WARFIELD
In His Great Success
THE AUCTIONEER.
THE TRAVELLER’S VISION.

I.
The night was wild, the lone wind howled; The wan moon hid her silver face; The pine trees moaned, the cedars groaned And ghouls crept out into their place Of meeting; while the traveller lost His path in the gloomy forest host.

II.
As midnight shades the darksome glades And wood-ghosts steal o’er fallen trees; When witch-light shines o’er hidden signs, The lonely traveller starts and sees The vision of a staring skull and bones; Bleached; cold and silent there among the stones.

III.
The wanderer fears, when there appears Before his startled trembling eyes— The bones arise as one who dies Before his time and mournful cries To Heaven for another taste of life, E’en tho’ ’tis mingled with all bitter strife.

IV.
The traveller speaks as one who seeks Surcease from sorrow’s weary chain; “Tell me, oh Ghost, art thou too lost, Hast thou then in the cold grave lain, Is it well, oh spirit, with thy soul; Or art thou but a twilight ghoul?”

V.
Thus spoke the shade whose speech then made The hollow echoes sound more wierd; “I am not dead as thou hast said, Fear now no longer as thou feared, A few short moments since, my face Possessed what foolish men call grace.”

VI.
But now ’tis past as when the blast Of Autumn strips the fairest flower Of bloom and life—as when a knife Doth end some lover’s happiest hour. My life was joyous then, and now There is no pain to make me bow.”

VII.
Again It spoke; “I know you look To find the secret of man’s death, I will not show, thou shalt not know Until thy latest passing breath. Be not the Tempter, not the Snake, For only once you die—and wake.

VIII.
Fear not the grave, be not the slave Of inward dread that killeth faith; But live thy life in peace, not strife, In waiting patiently for death.” The shade ceased speaking and sank down Once more to skull and bones,—life’s crown.

IX.
The wanderer wept, then sighed and slept, As rests a tired, weary child. At down he rose, as one who knows Of some one waiting undefiled. In peace of soul he went his way: Content to die, content to live his day.

CHI PSIS ENTERTAIN.

Their New Home Opened to the College.

The Chi Psi Lodge was a scene of great brilliancy Friday evening, when over a hundred guests graced the occasion of the opening of the Chi Psi’s new home on the campus to the college. The lodge is especially well adapted for dancing, the ground floor being so arranged that it can be thrown entirely open.
The numerous window seats and broad staircase leading up into a spacious hall afforded ample room and gave the lodge a cozy appearance.

Gioscia of Albany furnished music and dancing was enjoyed until the early hours of morning. Doberman of Schenectady served a dainty luncheon about midnight.

Those present were: Mrs A. V. V. Raymond, Mr and Mrs W. C. Vrooman, Mr and Mrs A. E. Gregg, Mr and Mrs Jas. H. Callanan, Mr and Mrs J. T. Schoolcraft, Pro. and Mrs G. E. Talmage, Mrs Albert G. Vedder, Mr and Mrs C. B. Pond, Mr and Mrs John D. Miller, Mr and Mrs S. B. Stewart Jr., Mrs E. E. Kriegsman, Mrs J. H. Clements, Mr and Mrs Wayne R. Brown, Mrs Van G. Furman, Mrs Rider; the Misses Lewis, Strain, Kriegsman, Mary Kriegsman, Anna Kriegsman, Linn, Whitlock, Fuller, Button, Gates, Gates, Ostrom, Haight, Smith, Calhoun, Bates, Horstmann, Clements, Griffith, Pitkin, Holtzmann, Rolfe, Lawrence, Reed, Furman. From out of town—Miss Van Zandt, Sandy Hill; Miss Rose Swinnerton, Cherry Valley; Miss White, Albany, Miss Beatrice Manning, Albany; Miss Tewkesbury, Lynn, Mass; Miss Pierson, Hudson; Miss Potter, Johnstown; Miss Swart, Glenville; Miss Hawkins, Brooklyn; Miss Schuyler, Albany.

The first baseball game on the campus this season was played with Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute last Saturday. The day was a very disagreeable one, the prevailing high winds rendering perfect or even good playing for either side almost impossible. The game was without any particular features and was characterized by loose playing. Wirt, the R. P. I. catcher, was a very competent and steady player behind the bat. O'Brien played a good game for Union. The loss of Heath was badly felt, although Staeber played well for his first game "on the mound." Only seven innings were played. The final score was 19—9 in favor of Union. Grout, captain of last year's team, umpired the game.

THE WEST POINT GAME.

On Saturday, April 11th, the Garnet nine lined up against the strong West Point contingent. After the first few innings, the soldiers were forced to place their best pitcher, considered one of the best amateurs in the country, in the box, for Union had begun to knock the first pitcher all over the diamond. Bingham was in the box for Union and he held the soldier's down to a very few hits. The individual playing was consistently good. The score was 1—0 in Union's favor up to the seventh inning, when West Point, on a long fly, with three men on bases, brought the score up to 3—1. No more runs were made by either side, and the game ended 3—1 in favor of West Point.

Mr. R. W. Clark, '05, formerly of the Conordiensis Board, is at present on the reportorial staff of the Springfield Republican.

QUESTIONS OF YOUTH.

If there be purpose in my life,
And I am on this earth to play a part,
Why, in the world's turmoil and strife,
Should I lose heart?

Why can I not judge aright,
Ere 'tis too late, what duty calls me here?
Why should I, though dim may be the light,
Not "read my title clear?"

If I should labor till the day
Which marks for me the setting sun,
Why should not a voice within me say,
"My faithful servant, 'tis well done?"

The Inter-class Track Meet. The captain and manager of the track team have arranged for an inter-class track meet this Saturday. It occurs just two weeks before the meet with Rutgers and is a last chance, or, if not the last, a very good chance, for anyone to show his athletic ability. The coach has been on the oval this week and seems to think that Union has prospects of a good team. Let everyone come out to this meet, and let those who do enter do their best and those who do not enter encourage those who do. It has been several years since Union won a track meet but if the Garnet's representatives turn out in good style, there is no reason why the meet cannot be captured from the New Jersey college this year. This is probably the best inter-class meet this year and it is an excellent opportunity for men to make their numerals, even though they think they stand no chance of making the team. One can never tell just how much he is good for until he tests his abilities to their greatest extent.

ON RESOLUTION.

When sore beset with myriad cares,—
With disappointment,—trouble,—strife,—
The sense that all ambition's vain,
That naught is pleasure, all is pain;
That one's a fool who calmly bears
The World's derisive scorns and flouts;
What must one do?

THIS should one do.

Stand firm, be brave, cheer up, fight on!

Feel sure that Might can ne'er make Right,
Just shape your course, and keep it straight.
Be honest,—though temptation's great.
Keep a strong guiding hand upon
Yourself, and your's will be the fight!

A LETTER FROM TEXAS.

Editor of the Concordiensis:

It may be of interest to the readers of the Concordiensis to know some facts concerning this part of the state of Texas and the work that is being done here by the U.S. Bureau of Forestry, of the Department of Agriculture. It would be well, first of all, to explain, in a general way what Forestry is, and what the Bureau is attempting to accomplish. The Division of Forestry has been in existence some eight years as one of the divisions under the Department of Agriculture. This was the first and only real interest shown in forestry in this country, with the exception of some private individuals, as Mr. George Vanderbilt at Biltmore, N. C., who had been putting into practice methods used by German foresters, which were modified to suit American conditions. The Division of Forestry was made into a Bureau in July, 1901, and at the same time greatly enlarged. It is steadily increasing year by year in size and usefulness and accomplishing the aims of its founders, namely, to bring to the people of the United States a realization of the immense wealth they possess in their forests and, which is more important, how to care for these forests so that they may produce an annual yield for all time.

The science of Forestry in this country is as yet very young. The owners of forests, both public and private, are just beginning to realize the importance of preserving the timber-supply, both because of the material itself and the forest's influence on climate and waterflow. The countries of the old world were brought face to face many years ago with the same problem of caring for the forests that were left to them, and are far ahead of us in scientific methods of forestry, Germany probably heading the list. Forestry has been defined as scientific lumbering. It is more than that. A better definition is that it is "The art of managing forests and utilizing them for the benefit of their owners. It is not the science or natural history of woodlands; nor is it the art of planting trees; nor that of preserving woodlands. It embraces all these things, or at least special phases of them are required in its practice."

The Bureau, in order to bring to the public mind its methods, offered a few years ago to make what is known as a "working-plan" for any lumber company or private corporation owning over a certain number of acres. This offer was accepted by a number of companies and individuals. Among the number for which working plans have been made and which have been put into actual operation are the following: for a tract in Polk and Monroe counties, Tenn., on the western slope of the Smoky Mountains, of 110,000 acres; for a tract of 60,000 acres belonging to the Okeetee Club, in Hampton and Beaufort counties, S. C.; for the Moose River Lumber Company in N. Y., a tract of 15,000 acres; a tract of 150,000 acres of the Great Northern Paper Company in the Northwestern part of Maine; for the Sawyer and Austin Lumber Company, of Pine Bluff, Ark., for the University of the South, at Sewanee, Tenn., on a tract of 6,000 acres, and the two large tracts upon which work is now being carried on, on the E. P. Burton tract of 72,000 acres of longleaf and yellow pineland in Berkeley county, S. C. and 1,250,000 acres of yellow pine land in south-east Texas belonging to the Kirby Lumber Company.

Upon the Kirby tract there are fifty men engaged, divided into four camps. The personnel of the parties is interesting. There are college graduates from a large number of colleges and many states are represented. The entire work is in charge of an expert forester from New Jersey, a Yale graduate, who has had practical work in the most diverse of North American forests,—the Adirondacks, in the Carolinas, Maine and the Northwest, besides having had training abroad. There is an expert lumberman from Maine, a forest engineer of twenty years experience in surveying and mapping. There are college men from Yale, Princeton, Harvard, Union, Sewanee,
Butler, Cornell, Lafayette, Manhattan, Lehigh, Roanoke, Dartmouth, Amherst, Charleston, Colby, Universities of Texas and Illinois, and the following agricultural colleges; North Carolina, Iowa and Michigan. There is also a Russian, a graduate of Russian and German universities and a Belgian prince, who, notwithstanding his pedigree and length of name is a fine fellow and charming camp-mate.

The actual work consists of stem-analysis, sample-plots and valuation survey. Stem-analysis is taken upon felled trees in the following manner. Upon the level, sawn surface of the stump an average radius is drawn from the centre to the circumference. The rings, which show the age, one ring for each year, are counted, beginning at the circumference, and each decade or tenth year marked. The total age is tallied with the age of the sapwood. The distance from the center to each decade-mark is measured, to hundredths, showing the growth in diameter for each ten years. This is tallied, also the width of the sapwood and width of the bark. The tree is sawed at intervals of ten feet, and analyses taken upon each one of the sections. From this is obtained the rate of growth of the tree not only for different heights and diameters but for every ten years of its life. The total height, the actual merchantable length, the possible merchantable length and the clear length are also found. From all these figures, rate of growth and yield or volume, tables are prepared.

Valuation survey is simply a method used to ascertain the number of board feet per acre on a certain tract. Regular survey lines are run, one-half mile apart, and all trees on a strip sixty-six feet wide, the length of a surveyor's chain, are measured with a pair of calipers at four and a half feet from the ground to find the diameter. Four men ordinarily compose a crew, compass-man, tally-man and two caliper-men, one on each side, each with a space thirty-three feet wide to cover. Each measurement is tallied with the species of the tree. This method, known as the "Strip Method," is considered to be the best for obtaining an accurate knowledge of the stand of timber upon a tract. The tallyman is also required to observe and record directions of all streams, and other topographical notes, besides a description of the soil, ground-cover, any herbs, plants or undergrowth, and other silvicultural notes.

The principal timber here in this work is longleaf and yellow pine, forming 80 per cent of the stand. The working plan will be made with special reference to this, although other pines, loblolly and shortleaf, will be considered along with hardwoods. There is a large variety of trees found throughout this part of the State. In hardwoods are found white, cow, chestnut and black oaks, on the slopes, with laurel, live, willow, pin, and water oak in the flats. There are also hollies, two kinds, magnolia, bay, black and sweet gum, ash, white and blue beech, and on the river bottoms and bayous fine cypress.

The climate of Texas is unique, both as to its variability and range, owing in a great measure to the size of the state. No one can foretell what the weather will be two hours hence. The sun may rise in a cloudless sky, the air warm and pleasant, almost tropical, before noon a "Norther" may be raging, while by night it may be warm and pleasant as May. Strange to say, notwithstanding the variety of temperatures, the vegetation is largely that of semi-tropical climate. Palms grow luxuriously in every swamp, or "bay-gall." Spanish moss swings in long, graceful festoons from the trees, magnolias and live-oaks are everywhere. Tropical insects and reptiles abound, on the warm days. Chameleons, tarantulas, centipedes, scorpions, moccasins, and rattle-snakes can be seen without looking very diligently. 'Tis a common occurrence while sitting around the camp-fire at night to see a centipede some six or eight inches in length, crawling slowly toward the fire. Tarantulas and scorpions may be found by simply turning over any decayed log, and chameleons can be seen sunning themselves on every other stump.
Mosquitoes, it is needless to say, are quite plentiful and of prodigious size and ferocity, even rivalling the noted Jersey species, the malarial fever variety being numerous. Dr A. D. Hopkins, of the U. S. Division of Entomology was here for a few weeks in November collecting specimens of the Texas mosquito. He obtained an ample supply.

The game in this part of the State is quite good; white-tailed deer, black bear, and bobcat are found; while smaller game, turkey, hares, quail and wood-cock are very plentiful.

The people with whom we come in contact are of the humbler walks of life, lumbermen, ranchers, farmers, most of them descendants of the original settlers in the state. Their surroundings, mean and lowly, yet we have always found them kindly, friendly, very hospitable and good-natured. They are proud of their state, in their way, and well they may be, for Texas is the largest and one of the richest states, only waiting to be developed and opened up, which is being done rapidly.

A STORY OF "AUMIE."

It was a beautiful night in the latter part of June during commencement week, while sitting with my uncle on the "jolly old seat of stone" in front of North College, that my uncle told me the following story. We had refilled our pipes, and after he had puffed a few minutes in silence he began, more as if thinking aloud the old memories recalled by the gray walls in front of us, now softened in their ruggedness by the silver moonlight, than actually telling me a story.

"'Twas during my senior year—how well I remember it! Yes, there are the stone steps, hollowed and worn smooth by the tread of generations of students. How often I have seen her toil up those same steps with pail and broom—but this is wandering. It was early fall, just after recitations had begun. I had bolted chapel one morning and was lazily unpacking some pictures I had brought from home for my room. Among them was one of myself, taken in a Scotch Highlander's costume, which I had worn in an amateur play at home. I was quite a broad-chested fellow in those days and didn't make a half bad Scotchman. I had spread the pictures out on my study table and was looking around the room to select a good place for them when I heard a rap at my door. I knew immediately, who it was, it was 'Aumie.' She had come to 'rid up' my room as she called it. It had been her duty for years to look after the students' rooms. She was a dear old Scotch lady with a bent form and lagging step; but her pleasant smile and kind 'guid mornin,' was a genuine pleasure to many a fellow who was inclined to the blues on a dull gray morning. Aumie had begun to sweep up the scraps of paper which I had packed between my pictures, and I was tacking up some of them with my back turned toward her, when I heard her utter an exclamation of mingled joy and pain. Turning around I saw her looking intently at my picture in the Scotch costume, her knotted hands working convulsively, as they grasped the broom handle.

'What's the matter Aumie'? I asked, thinking perhaps she was ill.

She sat down before she spoke, trembling violently.

'It gae me sic a start. I thocht it wur my Charlie. But nae, nae, it canna be. I ken well noo, 'tis ther Maister Culloden. It look as he did before he went awa'. He was a bonnie laddie my Charlie. The last time I saw heem he wur dressit like that,' she said, pointing with a trembling finger to the picture on the table. 'I ken well the time he cam to bid me guid bye. 'Twas in the gloamin' an' I wur glad for he couldna see the tears that would come in my een. For a long time we hearkit to the creekit's chirrup, an' I cude hear the tap, tap of the honeysuckle agin the lattice as the night-wind cam sighin' over the brae. At last Charlie took me in his arms an' slippit this ring on my finger, and as she spoke she turned back and forth on her finger a plain gold band, worn thin and dull with years of toil.

'An' then I knew he wur greetin', for his cheeks wur damp like mine. An' then he went awa'. Her voice had sunk almost to a whisper, and she was rocking gently to and fro.

'He ne'er cam back, my Charlie. Over an' over again hae I stuid by the lattice, wi' the honey suckle tappin' my face, waitin' for him, him, listenin' for him as of auld when he used to come singin' over the brae'. She leaned forward and spoke in a low, mysterious whisper, as if she was telling me some awful secret. 'Then they towd me he war dald, an' that he wouldn'a come back again, but I couldn'a believe that, nae, nae. An' I listened an' listened in the gloamin', but he ne'er cam back, nae, nae he ne'er cam back.'

Just then the bells began to ring for recitations, but Aumie did not hear them. Her dim, faded eyes did not see the room in which she sat, nor me; they saw the scenes of her youth, the fading gold of the twilight and the beloved form of her bonnie Charlie. Her ears did not hear the clang of the chapel bell, but were listening to the tap, tap of the honeysuckle against the lattice, the far away calls of night-birds, and to the voice of her laddie as he came singing over the brae through the purple twilight. Taking up a book from the table I started for the classroom, closing the door carefully, reverently behind me leaving Aumie in her fond, sad dream of her youth and love."

Our pipes had gone out, and as we arose to go to our rooms for the night I thought I saw a gleam of unwonted moisture in my uncle's eyes.

RED POTTAGE.

I
He who has tasted of the Pottage Red
Knows peace of mind no more,
He who from rest of soul has fled
Is heart sick of sin's lore.

II
He who has eaten of that sweetest fruit,
Which seeming sweet is bitterness withal,
Soon finds the rift of discord in his lute
Nor can he check his blinded downward fall.

III
Oh the anguish of the spirit soul when caught
Fast in the snare of sweet seducing's train,
He sold his heart of hearts and with it bought
Fierce bitterness and tears and mortal pain.

SONG,

Tune, "Come, Sister Come."

I
Roses white and red I bring thee
Memories of another clime,
Thoughts are sad and speech is low,
When I dream of the olden time.

II
Friendship true and love I bring thee
Tokens of a love divine
Say goodbye before I leave thee
For I am forever thine.

III
Say, dear, that you will remember,
When to other lands I go.
Say that you will ever love me
E’en when death’s waters o’er me flow!

The PIGAROONS, by Golettes Burgess and Will Irwin
Should be read by EVERY COLLEGE MAN.
This is honestly, one of the smoothest and richest things that ever happened. It is a gloriously "count" story and quite strong enough to make you forget many things you don't want to remember. Full of excitement, change of scene, and clever rudeness. It is sad and sweet, wild and adventurous, and filled with a keen show of humor that is entirely irresistible. Load it your eye.
The story or series of stories runs for twelve months, altho' you may read any one story of the series and feel that all is completed; but better begin at the beginning and we trust you to get the entire thing before you are thru.
Read these in PEARSON'S. 10 cents. All Newsdealers. ONE DOLLAR will give you a year's subscription to PEARSON'S in which during the coming year will be presented some of the best literature ever published. There are in course of preparation one or two very sensational articles based upon certain existing evils. These will be most thrilling in their fearless treatment of the men concerned in the scandals exposed
