Died in this village Saturday, July 10, Jacob C. Lansing, Esq., aged 61 1/2 years. Judge Lansing was grandson of the original patron of this village, and lived and died in one of the venerable mansions of the family. He graduated at Union College, in 1811, and after a course of study in the office of the late David Allen, Esq., he commenced the practice of law for himself, and by his talents and public spirit won the confidence and respect of the community, fairly conquering these prejudices which usually hedge up the way of one who attempts to establish himself in the place of his nativity. He was elevated by the suffrages of his fellow-citizens, and by executive appointment to posts of honor and trust. He was a member of the State Legislature, and also, for several years, Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of this County. But to few could the term "public spirited" be so appropriately applied as to him, and a natural and characteristic resoluteness of purpose made him a very efficient supporter of any cause which he might espouse. A christian community will be interested to learn, that during his last days, Judge Lansing made the word of God his constant companion. Only two days before his death, he remarked to a friend, "My views and feelings are expressed in the 8th and 9th chapters of Romans; as a sinner I cast myself on the Lord Jesus Christ and trust in his mercy alone." Lansingburgh Gazette.

The Salem Press
Salem, N. Y.
July 20, 1852.
JACOB LANSING

Jacob Lansing, from Albany, N.Y., became a lawyer in that city, where he still resides. In 1828, he was appointed a Judge of Albany County Court.

Catalogue of the Graduates of Middlebury College p. 27

JACOB C. LANSING, A.M., 1811, a member of the Philomathean Society, was a resident of Lansingburgh, N.Y. (Died: 1852)

Philomathean Catalogue 1830.